ITCHING BURNING WATER BLISTERS

On Little Girl's Head, A Terrible Sight. Little Boy Broken Out Over Body, Awake Nights.

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"My little girl's trouble began by her head coming out in small water blisters, and when they would burst, wherever the water would touch, it would form a sore spot and there would soon be a scale on it, and so on until the whole head was a terrible sight.
My little boy was affected with the trouble a month and in a few days was broken out all over his body. My daughter was annoyed very much and my little boy was continually scratching. They had the trouble a month and it was very bad, itching and burning and they both lay awake nights.
"Remembering what Cuticura Soap and Ointment had done for my two other children I made up my mind to try them.
In six weeks they were entirely healed."

Why Not Have Perfect Lenses?

Improvements and batterments in eye glasses are just as frequent as in anything else.

Until a few years ago all lenses were flat, because no one had thought of a better way to make them.

Today nearly 90 per cent of lenses fitted are Toric lenses, curved to follow the shape of the eyeball.

Toric lenses give a perfect range of vision from every angle—the edges do not confuse you when looking from the corner of the eye.

Let us demonstrate the many advantages of Toric lenses made by us.

It was in who sowed discord between Donald McKenzie and his wife Effie. This unhappy girl committed suicide, and Donald McKenzie went abroad and became infatuated with a woman. When he returned to New York he swore to be avenged on Freeman.

There was a quarrel between Tom and Jack Freeman was shot. Blanche Gordon was arrested for the murder and in court she swore that she killed Freeman in defense of her honor. It looked as though the woman would be condemned for the murder until Donald McKenzie came forward to depose that it was he who had killed Jack Freeman by having robbed him, McKenzie, of his wife Effie.

After the trial Blanche Gordon and Tom Gordon, her husband, were reunited and they neither of them forgot her terrible torture on "The Luck" on the trial for murder which she did not commit. At the season today, "THE LUCK"—William A. Brady presents the charming actress, Alice Brady, today at the Saison Theatre in the new-reel society drama, "The Luck." It is a vital story with a gripping plot that shows the life of a man who ruins another man's wife. "THE PENITENTS."—The Penitents are a band of men who are dwelling in Mexico in the seventeenth century. They indulge in cruel tortures during their ceremonial. While celebrating the Crucifixion in a realistic way up in the mountains, the Indians attack their settlement in the valley. After killing all the inhabitants they meet except a priest, Father Rosas, the Indians fall upon the Penitents during their ceremonial. There is a hard struggle, the Indians being repulsed. When the Penitents return to the settlement they find in hiding an old servant and a little boy named Manuel as the only survivors. Manuel is heir to a rich farm and the greedy leader of the Penitents persuades the band to take over the farm and keep the lad ignorant of his riches. When Manuel is grown up, the Penitents become suspicious of the hypocrisy of a priest named Father Jovito in regard to the identity of Manuel. They induce the young man to become the victim in the rite of crucifixion and finally kill him. Jovito is a young girl who is in love with Manuel, but in spite of all her efforts aided by a clever woman named Senorita Camello, she cannot dissuade him from taking part in this ceremonial. WINTER WEATHER IS HOLDING BACK BUILDING PLANS

Contract for Building Globe Theatre Will be Let Soon.

DWELLINGS MAY BE BUILT

It is Said That Realty Investors See Demand for Moderate Priced Houses for Renting Purposes; Steps to the Royal Hotel Are Being Studied.

Bad weather this week held up building operations though continued reports that they are resuming quickly as to plans and prices for new homes from a number of families who expect to build this summer.

Bids for the change to the Globe Theatre Building on North Pittsburg street are being received and the contract will be let shortly in order that work may be well under way by the time spring gets here.

The changes at the Royal Hotel are progressing rapidly. The plans for the new modern picture theatre that may be built in the southern half of the building have been approved by the state authorities and nothing remains now but the closing of the deal for the leasing of the house.

The raising of W. H. Showman's farm residence at Hillview avenue and Prospect street is completed. Nothing remains of this building but the brick chimneys.

The likelihood that many small houses with modern conveniences may be built for renting purposes this year is strong. These have proven good investments in the past, there being no trouble securing tenants for them at from $15 to $20 a month.

CHAPTER IX

Gerry's cablegram to his mother was forwarded to Red Hill on the very day that the judge had gone to tell them that no trace could be found of the missing man. The judge was more downhearted than ever over Gerry's disappearance and when he found the two women radiating happiness and excitement his heart sank lower still. "I haven't any good news," he said ruefully before he left. "I have only one more thing to tell you."

"Tell me," said Alix in a low tone to Mrs. Lansing.

But Mrs. Lansing had found new lines in the judge's tired face and she whispered back, "I can't." She put the cablegram in the judge's hand.

"What's this?" he said and read it. Then he gave a war-whop, caught Alix around the waist and kissed her. The first were gay that night—gay with the joy of happy people happily planning. In a month, say at the most, two months, Gerry could be here. Spring would have come. The fall would be decked out in full regalia of leaf and blossom. It would be in full communion to meet him. They looked at Alix and Alix seemed to look at herself. He would come into his own as never before.

The judge undertook the cablegram. He called Gerry and the message was reported undelivered. Then he called the American consul. There followed a long series of messages: first quick and hopeful, then lagging but not despondent, then a wearying silence of weeks, ending with the terrible blow. Gerry had been traced to the San Francisco river. The envoy sent on his track by the judge's orders had reached Piranias to find the little town in pathetic wonder over the discovery of Gerry's canoe stranded three miles down the river. The pilot was still in the canoe and a suit of pyjamas. No further trace of Gerry had been found. His body had not been recovered. The people said it was not unusual. He had undoubtedly been attacked by tiger fish. In that case his bones would have been stripped of flesh. It was impossible to drag the great river.

The judge hid in his heart the horrifying details. To Mrs. Lansing he told the central fact. She was struck dumb with grief and then she thought of Alix. Almost instantly she decided that it was not a time to tell Alix and during long months they put her off with false news of the search. They carried it farther and farther into the wide of the subcontinent. The country was so vast, there was no telling where the messenger would finally come up with Gerry.

Alix bore the strain with wonderful patience. The truth was that her thoughts were not on Gerry. Something greater than Gerry was claiming all her faith—all her strength of body and soul. She did not talk. She was holding that final communion with her truest self with which a woman dedicates her body to pain and sacrifice. Alix was a girl. In those days the spirit of the race—her race of pluckers—shone from her steady eyes and even put courage to those about her.

Only when the ordeal was over and an heir to the house of Lansing had raised his lusty voice in apparent rage at having been born to so small a kingdom, did the trail Alix of other days come back. As she lay, pale and thin, but with the glorious light of supreme achievement in her eyes, Mrs. Lansing went on her knees beside the bed and sobbed, "Oh, Alix, I love you so. I love you so!"

Alix smiled. Slowly she reached one hand over and placed it in Mrs. Lansing's. "You see, crying because you are a granny now," she said, softly, playfully.

Then came the day when Alix was strong—strong enough. Mrs. Lansing told her in a choked voice what they knew and what everyone believed. "Poor mother!" said Alix, her lips against the wet cheek. "How strong you've been! How you hid it from me! What a burden to carry in your heart, and smile. But listen, dear mother. You are all wrong. Perhaps I would not have known it if you had told me—then—but I know it now. Gerry is not dead. There is no river that can drown Gerry."

"My dear," said Mrs. Lansing, frightened, "you must not think that. It's always the best swimmers that risk the most."

"It isn't that he can swim," said Alix. Her eyes turned slowly till they rested on her son. Her bosom swelled at the memory of the travail—the terrible travail that she had borne, not for the child alone, nor for Gerry alone, but for them both. "Swimming has nothing to do with it. Somehow I know that Gerry is all right, somewhere on this little world. Only, dear, and here her voice faltered and her eyes shone with tears, "this little world seems mighty big when hearts are far apart."

Alix clung to her belief. So strong was her faith that Mrs. Lansing became infected, but the judge held out against them. "My heart is with you," he said at the end of months. "But my head won't turn. A naked man, even in South America would have caused remark. Why shouldn't he have come back for his clothes, for his money? After all, he wasn't a fugitive from justice. He was a man wandering over the earth in pursuit of a mere whim and a whim doesn't last forever."

Alix interrupted him. "Judge, I do not never been angry with you. We all owe you too much. But if you ever say 'was' about Gerry again, she stopped and bit her lip but her eyes spoke for her.

"My dear girl," said the judge and only the color showed that he was hurt. "Don't be angry with me. It shall be as you say. I've only been trying to save you from years of weary waiting. If you have the courage to wait for sorrow, I shall wait too."

Alix kissed him. "There," she said. "I'm sorry I was rough."

"You're rough!" laughed the judge. Then he jumped up. "I'm forgetting my duties. I have a guest of my very own at Maple House and I must go to him."

A few weeks before, Hon. Percy Collingford had looked up the judge. It was as much a pleasure to the young man as a duty he owed to his father, whose friend the judge had been for many years.

Collingford was no stranger to America but he knew far more about dodging arroyos in New Mexico on a cow pony than he did about dodging the open trenches and debris of Fifth Avenue on the trail of a ten-penny. He was an Englishman, a younger son with enough money to put him above the routine class, and he was possessed of far more intelligence than he had been born with. For, from his youth up, he had sought out experience in many places. He came back from the Klondike with more money than he needed for his passage but only a few kindred spirits knew that he had made it hammering the piano in The Fallen Star of Hope. He had the English gentleman's common creed: ride straight, shoot straight, bluff often and talk the king's English. That creed fulfilled, nothing else seemed to worry him.

Chapter X

Gerry Lansing was sitting alone in the shadow of a bush, his knees gathered in his arms and his head bowed down. Great quivering sighs that were almost sobs were shaking his strong body. In one terrific swirl of memory he had wrenched him from the hum of generations, tossed him high and dropped him broken. Between the moment when he had plunged from the sandspit and the moment when he had stood primal man in a primeval world. With the drop of water from the river he had flicked off the bonds it had taken centuries to forge. And now his trunk conscience returned to stand dismayed.

The girl, dressed in a business-suit robe belted at the waist, came back down a half-hidden path, shyly at first and then with a soft cry of joy when she saw him. She came to him weeping. She tossed him a cotton jumper and trousers and then drew back and waited for him in the path. He rose slowly to his feet, dressed and dressed the girl.

She led him along the path through the brush and out into a little valley made up of rounded cane and rice bottoms. In the center was a slight elevation, too low to be called a hill, and on it was an old plantation house, white stucco oiled, now sadly weathered, its tiles green-black with the moss of years.

She pointed to the house and then to herself and smiled. He understood the pantomime and nodded. When they reached the house a withered wrinkled little woman came out and held out her hand. He shook it listlessly. They walked through a long dividing hall. On each side were large rooms, empty, save one where a big bed, a washstand, and an old bureau with milky glass, were grouped like an oasis in a desert. They reached the kitchen. It was evidently the living room of the house. A ban-

He was dining with the judge at the club one night when the name of Wayne—Alan Wayne—floated over occasionally from a neighboring table. Later as they sat over their coffee and cigars Collingford said abruptly, "I know a chap named Wayne."

"So?" said the judge.

"Hear those people mention Alan Wayne?" explained Collingford. "I wonder if it was the same one—Ten Percent Wayne of Africa."

"That's the one," said the judge and watched Collingford's face.

"Hum," said Collingford. "When I saw Wayne he was in a shirt sleeve and a battered sun helmet. There are some men that won't shake hands with him, but I'm not one of them."

It was then that the judge decided to take Collingford to Maple House for over Sunday.

mocked out of one corner. Chairs were drawn up to a rough, uncovered table. A stove was built into the masonry and a cavernous oven gaped from the masonry wall.

At the stove was an old negroess, making coffee with shaky deliberation. On the floor sat an old darky clad only from his waist down in such tattered rags as Gerry was wearing, except that they were soiled and tattered. He looked up and fastened his eyes on Gerry and then struggled to his feet. The old negroess of some bygone while master brought a steaming cup of coffee to the table. Gerry took it with a grateful smile. He raised his head into his hairy eyes. He raised his hand in the national gesture of child to parent, slave to master. "Blessing, mister, blessing!" Gerry had learned the meaning of the quaint custom. He pointed to himself. He understood that the old negroess was talking about him. He pointed to himself. He understood that the old negroess was talking about him.

They made him sit down at the table and placed before him crisp runks of manioc flour and steaming coffee whose splendid aroma triumphed over the stinkiness of the scene and through the heavy touch of the palate with anticipatory touch. It was sweetened with dark pungent sliver and was served black in a capacious bowl, as though one could not drink too deeply of the elixir of life.

Gerry ate ravenously and sipped the coffee at first sparingly then greedily. The old negroess fluttered nervously about the stove, nursing its inadequate fire of charcoal. Her eyes were big with wonder at the capacity of the white master. The old negro had sunk back to his seat on the floor. The two white women stood and watched Gerry. The more he ate the more they urged.

Gerry set down the empty bowl with a sigh. The stews had been delicious. Before the coffee the negroes had divided to him. Gerry ate the girl had fed him a corn husk, scraped thin as paper. Now she slipped it into his fingers. The old negroess picked up a live coal and, passing it from shaky hand to shaky hand, deposited it on his plate. Gerry lit the cigarette. With the first long contented whiff he smiled. The smoke, he thought, was delicious. With a crown he drew away the cigarette and rose from the table. "The brute is fed and lazing," he said aloud and strode from the room. The girl and the little wrinkled woman looked at each other. They seemed to sense the unwholesome words. The old darky crawled across the floor and possessed himself of the cigarette.

Gerry went to sit himself on the steps of the veranda. Before him stretched the fallow valley, beyond it gleamed the black line of the rushing river. To the right were the ruins of a sugar mill and stables. To the left the debris that once had been slaves' quarters. The fields still bore the hummocks, in rough alignment, that told the story of past years' fruitful cane. Alix was waste, all was ruin.

The girl slipped to a seat beside him. She rolled a fresh cigarette and then shyly laid a small brown hand on his arm. He looked at her. Her big brown eyes were so wonderful and pleading. She held out the cigarette with a little shrug that deprecated the smallness of the offering.

Gerry felt a twinge of remorse. He put the hand on his arm, and the girl's face lit up. She called and again the negroess brought fire. This time Gerry smoked gravely. The girl sat on beside him. Her hand lay on his. So they sat until the sun passed the zenith and, slipping over the eaves, fell like fire on their bare feet. Gerry stood up, pointed to himself and then down the river to the town. The girl shook her head. She made him understand that he was cut off from the town by an impassable tributary to the great river—that he would have to make a long detour inland. Then she swept her hand from the sun to the horizon to show him that the day was far gone for the journey.

He was much concerned. An apathy seized him at the thought of going back. He felt as though shame had left some visible scar on his countenance that men must see and read. As he stood, thoughtful and detached, the girl grasped his arm with both hands and drew his attention to her. Then she gave one sweep of her arm that embraced all the ruin of home and mill and debris. She pointed to herself. He understood that those things were hers. Then she took his hands and with a gesture of surrender laid them in his.

It was eloquent. There was no mistaking her meaning. Gerry was touched. He held both her clasped hands in one of his and put his arm around her shoulders. She drew her eyes on his face for the answer. Once more Gerry's eyes wandered over all that ruin. After all, he thought, why not? Why not bury his own ruin here in company? But she read no decision in his face though she watched it long. What she saw was debate and for the time it satisfied her.

Gerry all that afternoon was very silent and thoughtful—silent because there was no one he could talk to, thoughtful because the idea the girl had put into his head was taking shape, aided by a long chain of circumstances. He looked back over his covered trail. If he had been some shrewd fugitive from justice he could not have planned it better. His sudden flight without visiting his home, his failure to buy a ticket, the subordination of the purser with its assurance of silence as to his presence or destination, all that had been wiped out by his cablegram to his mother. But then fate had stepped in again and once more blotted out the trail. Some genius had heard his wish. The old Gerry Lansing was dead. Even from himself the old Gerry Lansing had been torn away in a chariot of fire.

Tender Teeth—the first sign of Pyorrhea

When you brush your teeth, does it feel as though you were brushing against the quick? Do the gums sometimes bleed? This is because pyorrhea has caused the gums to pull away from your teeth, leaving the unenamelled surfaces unprotected.

Your dentist will tell you, if you ask him, that you have gum recession; and that gum recession is caused by pyorrhea.

Unchecked, pyorrhea will warp and shrink and deform the gums. It will break down the bony structure into which the teeth are set—and you will eventually lose them. To save your teeth you will have to begin to fight this dread disease at once.

A specific for pyorrhea has been discovered recently by dental science, and is now offered for daily treatment in Senreco-Tooth Paste. Senreco combats the germ of the disease. Its regular use insures your teeth against the attack or further progress of pyorrhea.

But Senreco does more. It cleanses the teeth delightfully. It gives them a whiteness distinctive of Senreco alone. Its flavor is entirely pleasing, and it leaves in the mouth a wonderful sense of coolness and wholesomeness.

Start the Senreco treatment before pyorrhea grips you for good. Details in folder with every tube. A two-ounce tube for 25c is sufficient for 6 weeks' daily treatment. Get Senreco of your druggist today, or send 4c in stamps or coin for sample tube and folder. Address The Senreco Remedies Company 593 Union Central Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CAYUGA LAKE MAY GET POUGHKEEPSIE RACES THIS YEAR

It is Making a Strong Bid for Intercollegiate Classics.

COURSE IS SOMEWHAT SHORTER

Facilities are such that as large a crowd can be accommodated as on Hudson, and crews would not find it hard to get quarters.

By Associated Press.
NEW YORK, March 4.—Although the members of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association have not yet decided definitely upon either the Poughkeepsie or Hudson course for the 1916 regatta, Cornell authorities have outlined the possibilities of the Cayuga lake as the scene of the intercollegiate row races. From the spectators' standpoint observation of facilities at Poughkeepsie is being made by Cornell men on the Hudson river stretch.

At Poughkeepsie a track of 99 yards, which has been provided in past years, thirty-six of which were for the use of spectators, including the general public, alumni and independent rowers. Each one will seat about 100 persons. In recent seasons the track, which is well situated for the view at any point along the proposed three-and-a-quarter mile course and there are various points along the high banks for thousands who prefer them to the rolling grandstands.

Fifty thousand spectators in the maximum gathering at Poughkeepsie are estimated to have been followed by intercollegiate rowing and it is thought that the regatta on Cayuga lake would draw as many if not more. With Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and other large cities to draw from any falling off in the attendance from New York, Philadelphia and Boston, rowing teams will be fully met. A majority of this time would be spent in the regatta, and the time of the race and the time of the regatta would be equal to those of the regatta.

Training facilities for the competing colleges which would probably include Columbia, Pennsylvania, Syracuse, Cornell, Cornell, Stanford, and possibly one other faculty crew, are fully equal to those offered by the Poughkeepsie course. There is a forty mile stretch of water for long work-outs, some miles of which are protected by a high shore line affording smooth water even in a stiff blow. In calm weather the entire lake is available for practice.

Shell quarters could be provided by the headquarters of the Cornell Sixty, the Intercollegiate Rowing Club and Cornell School. A shore hotel and private cottages, scattered along the lake, could be hired for the summer while in training, affording accommodations for shells and the necessary culinary departments. As a result of this stock-taking Cornell authorities are convinced that the regatta can be staged satisfactorily on Cayuga lake.

The matter is, however, entirely in the hands of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association which will not make any effort to secure the regatta, leaving the final decision to the association. If the four mile Poughkeepsie course is selected, Cornell will be thoroughly satisfied. If the three-and-a-quarter mile stretch of Cayuga is chosen, then town and gown will endeavor to make the enforced absence from the Hudson next June a pleasant college regatta in the history of the famous college regatta.
